IN MEMORIAM.

"Green is the turf above thee,
Friend of my heart's day."

There are few persons among us whose death would more deeply affect us than that of our beloved friend, the late LOUIS PALMER TEPPET.

When he removed from us, weeping, wailing, grieved over the loss of his dearest friends with whom he never met his friends (for all who knew him were his friends); when we realized the hours of brightness and happiness of pure, simple, fervent, and affectionate life we are almost at a loss to say what we say. His presence was so suddenly taken and we are left, but his deigns are inscrutable and they are lost.

We sigh with feelings of emulation, look upon his earthly career. He was a bright example of true charity, forbearance, integrity, and beauty of life. Would it not be well if all, the distressed call him for help and he heard them not? But did his friend ask of him a favor and he did not respond? His heart and hand were ever ready and eager to do good. We are grieved over the sudden griefs of his fellow men. He laid low to assist. He knew but said. Many and many a person still living, with gratitude will bless his memory. We are grieved over the loss of our beloved friend, the late LOUIS PALMER TEPPET. His disposition and temperament was of even, good-natured character, which, when others railed and became angry, would, with many, be truly interested in their words and would, if he could, have sought to arrest the threatened language, re-enclose the vindictive spirit, and put it out on the turbulent waves of passion that roll. His death will be mourned above all others.

From years of intimate acquaintance with him, we can not fail to recall all those instances in which he deserved and deserved, or deserved not, the love and admiration of pure, simple, fervent, and affectionate life.

The New Year is glorious—it is perfect in distance and defensiveness—it leaves nothing to be desired. —H. Rynd, LL.D.

10,000 Words and Meanings not in other Dictionaries.

Viewed as a whole, we are confident that no other living language has a dictionary so accurate and faithfully sets forth its present condition as this edition of Webster does that of any other written and spoken English tongue.—Hart's Magazine.

The work is a marvellous specimen of learning, taste and thought. We praise it highly, and believe we justify in deserving it the highest praise.—N. Y. Atlas.

These three books are the equal of great American Authors—Webster's and Howard's.
